Sexual Violence Research Initiative and the World Bank Group's 2018 Development Marketplace for Innovation in the prevention and response of gender-based violence
(In memory of Hannah Graham)

General Introduction

Gender-based violence (GBV) is one of the greatest social, economic and development challenges facing the world today. At least one-third of women across the globe experience GBV and the health and development consequences that this violence brings. The costs of violence are substantial. Violence against women and girls impedes full participation in society, limits access to education, labor force participation and ownership of assets, to name a few. For intimate partner violence alone, selected country estimates suggest that out-of-pocket expenditures, lost income and reduced productivity can amount to up to 3.7% of GDP- more than what many governments spend on primary education¹. Effective GBV prevention and response is an area of work for multi-lateral and bilateral agencies, governments and NGOs, with an increasing body of interventions based on research and evidence contributing to the field's knowledge about what works to stem the cycle of violence. Capitalizing on this momentum to achieve broader and more sustainable change requires tapping the creative energy of emerging leaders and solution-makers. It also requires documenting our successes and failures to ensure that we continue to advance the field by investing limited resources towards the most effective strategies. To contribute to this global effort, the Sexual Violence Research Initiative (SVRI) in partnership with the World Bank Group (WBG) have created the Sexual Violence Research Initiative and the World Bank Group's Development Marketplace for Innovation in the prevention and response of gender-based violence in low and middle income settings.²

The SVRI and the WBG are requesting proposals for innovative research and interventions or related activities that will contribute to the prevention and response of gender-based violence in low and middle income countries.

Due to high levels of competition and limited funds available, the quality of the proposal submitted will determine success in your funding application. Applications from legally constituted institutions and organizations that have existing capacity, with high quality proposals are most likely to be successful in this category.

Eligibility of Applications

Applications for support under this award should be affiliated with a recognized, legally constituted research institution or non-government organization with existing research or programming capacity.

A maximum of two proposals will be considered for funding per applicant. Only one award through this mechanism may be held by an applicant until the project has been completed. Award applications that are proposing work on behalf of UN Agencies will not be considered. Previous award winners will not be considered as principal applicants.

Nature of Supported Projects

All projects under this call should focus on the prevention and response of GBV in low and middle income countries.

Types of projects that may be supported through this call for proposals include:

- Piloting, adaptation, testing and/or scale up of new or promising interventions, including formative research that will contribute to the design of GBV prevention interventions, or projects on the creative uses of Information and Communications Technology (ICT), or multi-components social media campaigns to challenge social norms that promote and accept the use of violence against women and children.
- Self-contained research projects that are either stand alone or fit within a larger project which will build on, or support prevention or response of GBV, including formative research studies, pilot or feasibility studies.
- Costing studies on promising/effective GBV interventions to assess value for money.
- Adding a new component/arm to an already funded intervention that can provide additional insight into the effectiveness of intervention components.
- Projects to disseminate promising research findings including those with creative uses of ICT to advance the effective translation of research findings into policy and practice (increase research uptake and bridge the gap between researchers and program officers).
- Secondary analysis of existing data
- Studies to better understand the mechanisms and pathways of change of effective GBV prevention interventions
- Studies to measure ripple/spillover effects of women's economic empowerment or political participation programming on GBV.
- Research on the role of the private sector in GBV prevention and response

If the funds are sought for scale up or dissemination activities, the application must provide sufficient information to enable the scientific quality of the original study to be assessed as well as a description of the activities for which funds are requested.

Project Length and Duration

The activities supported under this award should be for a maximum of 24 months duration, with the expectation that the award will cover all, or the majority of, the costs of the activities specified. The common characteristic of these awards is the provision of limited funding for a short period of time with a clear measurable outcome. Awards of up to $100,000 are available. Any applications with requests exceeding USD100,000 will not be considered.

Guiding Principles for SVRI and World Bank Group’s Development Marketplace for Innovation in the prevention and response of GBV

Projects supported by the SVRI and the World Bank Group should:

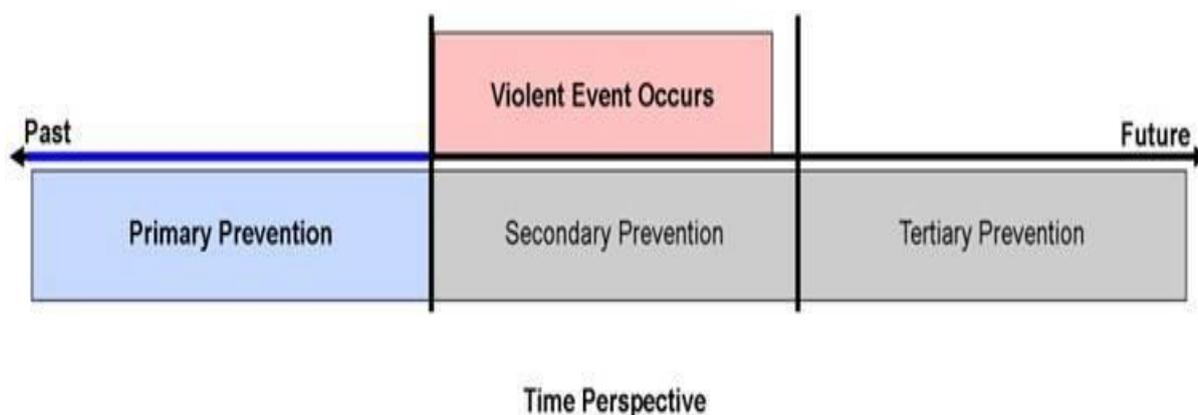

- Adhere to international safety and ethical guidelines
- Focus on low and middle income-settings
- Be conceptualized within a human rights framework
- Strive to be cross-sectoral and multi-disciplinary;
- Where relevant and appropriate endeavor to engage the community that is being researched;
- Challenge the gender hierarchy that contributes to GBV in order to promote gender equality.
- Inform policy, programs and services and serve to strengthen access to comprehensive care and support for survivors

Types of Violence

The focus of this award is on building evidence for the primary prevention of GBV as a mechanism for preventing future perpetration and victimization. Gender-based violence can include, but is not limited to, intimate partner violence, sex trafficking, sexual harassment, harmful traditional practices such as early and forced marriage, so called “honor” killings, and female genital mutilation/cutting.

Understanding Primary and Secondary Prevention

The following graphic provides an overview of the different levels of prevention.

(Source: WHO Intimate partner and sexual violence prevention course - http://www.who.int/violence_injury_prevention/capacitybuilding/courses/intimate_partner_violence/en/)

Using this framework, primary prevention interventions aim to address underlying causal factors or drivers of GBV, such as gender inequality, problematic social constructions of gender, and a prevailing “culture of violence” (or the normative use of interpersonal violence), in an effort to prevent the violence before it starts. For more information on SVRI’s work on primary prevention visit: <http://www.svri.org/primaryprevention.htm>. Primary prevention strategies should be deployed where services for survivors are available.

Service provision is considered secondary prevention when it addresses the immediate needs of survivors after experiencing a violent incident and actively seeks to provide the survivor the necessary services to contribute to the violence from re-occurring.

Eligible Countries and Organizations

- Low and Middle Income Countries: All organizations based in low and middle income countries (as classified by the World Bank), and organizations not based in low and middle income countries but working in such countries with local partners are eligible to apply.
- Track Record: Priority will be given to organizations with a track record of research and intervention development for the prevention of gender-based violence in low and middle income countries.
- Institutions Only: Awards will only be made to institutions and not to individuals. All non-profit organizations are eligible to apply, including academic, research, NGOs.
- Number of Proposals: An organization may submit a maximum of two applications but no organization will receive more than one award.
- Partnerships: Partnerships between multiple organizations are encouraged, for example, a local NGO and an academic institution, and north-south academic partnerships. Where appropriate, these partnerships should have as an objective building the research capacity of the implementing agency.

Review process: Grant winners will be selected through a rigorous, multi-layered selection process. Once the deadline has closed, all proposals are scanned/reviewed by internal SVRI and WBG staff. Proposals that do not fulfil basic eligibility criteria will be excluded at this stage, such as applications that are off topic, not based within a low and middle income country, exceed project time frames or budget requirements, submitted late, not submitted via the online application system, or do not meet the basic administrative application requirements.

The SVRI Secretariat and WBG will then shortlist eligible applications for review by WBG regional operational staff. Eligibility is assessed according to strict, clear selection criteria. Guided by the regional review, SVRI, WBG and Wellspring staff where available, will jointly prepare a shortlist of 20 proposals found eligible and technically solid for final review by a small external expert panel. The small external international expert review committee will consist of up to six members, made up of representatives with technical expertise in the field of GBV prevention and/or proposal review experience. Participation in the expert panel is done on a voluntary basis. Members of all review committees are required to adhere to the SVRI and World Bank Development Marketplace Conflict of Interest Policy by completing and submitting the Declaration of Conflict of Interest Form. The results of the review process will be sent within five months of the application.

Review criteria and scoring of proposals: SVRI staff, WBG staff and peer reviewers are asked to evaluate proposals according to a set criteria as well as specific questions under each criterion. In submitting a proposal for funding, applicants should make every effort to ensure that the proposal address these aspects. The criteria and questions are outlined below.

Criterion	What reviewer has to comment on
Overall merit	Will the project build the evidence for primary or secondary prevention of gender-based violence in low and middle income countries? If it is an intervention, is the intervention likely to succeed with respect to the qualifications of the project team, the institution within which the project is housed?
Research / project design and methods	Is the design / method sound, feasible and relevant to the questions being asked? Is the approach proposed appropriate and likely to accomplish the project goal and outcomes? Are potential problems recognized and addressed with alternative approaches? Does the project include a thorough proposal for capturing lessons learned during design and implementation?

Significance of the proposed project	Will the project build capacity, technical skill and knowledge in the field of primary or secondary prevention of GBV? Will the project advance basic theoretical concepts, improve or enhance policy and practice in the field of GBV prevention? Does the application build on current knowledge in the field? Does it challenge and seek to shift current research or approaches to policy and practice by utilizing sound theoretical concepts, approaches, methodologies, tools or interventions? If relevant to the project - does the project provide a clear theory of change? Will the project contribute to solving barriers to progress in the field? Is the project replicable?
Project manager / team	Is the training and experience of the project manager and team appropriate for the project or activity? Is there sufficient expertise and level of accomplishments within the team / institution to generate confidence in success?
Ethical considerations	Will human subjects be utilized in the project? If so, will they be appropriately protected from potential research risk? Will the project be conducted in a professional manner, in accordance with the applicable industry standards, and ethical guidelines, including but not limited to: Putting Women First: Ethical and Safety Recommendations for Research on Domestic Violence Against Women , Department of Gender and Women's Health Family and Community Health. World Health Organization. 1999; Researching Violence against Women: A Practical Guide for Researchers and Activists .
